

BEAVIS AND BUTT-HEAD DO CRYPTICS

"All the Clues that's Unfit to Print"

9 entries can be interpreted as cryptic wordplays. For example, the entry LARGE-BUSTED could be a cryptic instruction to anagram "large." These entries are clued in non-standard fashion: the clue contains a definition but, instead of wordplay, it contains a word generated by interpreting the entry as a wordplay. Thus our example would be clued as a definition plus an anagram of "large". A complete clue might be "Filling capacious cups of lager." The theme always generates a single word, necessarily the first or last word in the clue. Most theme entries are multiple words or hyphenated; this information is withheld from the enumerations. Non-theme clues are (sub)standard.
